

WEST SIDE RESERVOIR & TRANSMISSION MAIN PROJECT

The City of Wilsonville is home to over 26,000 residents and is rapidly growing. To ensure the City's water system has the capacity to serve our expanding community, a new west-side reservoir and transmission line are being constructed. When complete, the new reservoir will add more than 3 million gallons of safe and resilient water storage to our water system.

Project Highlights

The City of Wilsonville is constructing a new seismically resilient reservoir and transmission line to increase overall water storage capacity to support growth and provide an additional water supply in the event of an emergency.

The project supplements four existing water storage tanks currently operated by the City and will be constructed on City-owned property on SW Tooze Road in unincorporated Clackamas County. The water transmission line will connect the new reservoir to the community's existing water system.

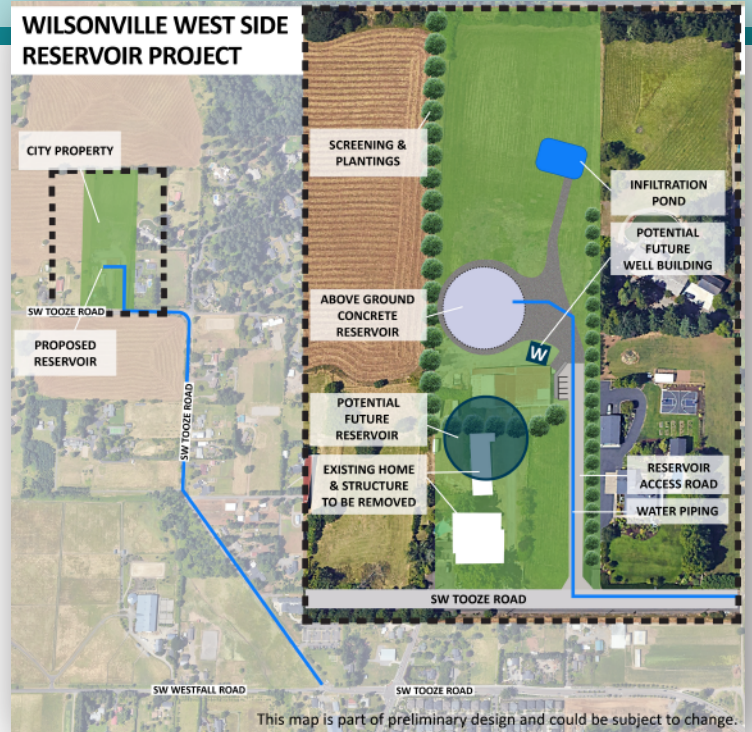

Planned Improvements

- 3-million-gallon water storage reservoir built to modern seismic and operational standards
- Stormwater management
- Associate electrical and communications
- Access driveway
- Landscaping and screening
- 3,000 linear feet of 24-inch water transmission line

Project Benefits

- Increases water storage and delivery capacity to support growth
- Provides additional water for everyday use and emergencies
- Provides seismic resilience in the event of an earthquake
- Reduces time and cost to build by using existing City-owned site
- Offers space for future water system improvements

The project will be coordinated with neighbors, neighboring municipalities and service providers to help minimize construction disruptions, time, and costs.

The new water reservoir will be located on city-owned property in unincorporated Clackamas County.
